

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method for optimizing relationships between logic commands defining a circuit design is described. The method comprises, for each logic command determining whether the logic command is a primitive logic command; and, responsive to the logic command not being a primitive logic command, decomposing the logic command into its most primitive form.